The Houston Symphony is preparing to host its first performances in the newly renovated Jones Hall downtown, which recently wrapped up the latest phase of an ongoing $60 million improvement project.

Among the upgrades are new theater seats, acoustical improvements, new lighting and audiovisual equipment, and improved access to the theater's newly expanded restrooms.

“All of these improvements were designed to improve the experience of audience members and performers,” Houston Symphony CEO John Mangum told the Houston Business Journal during a recent tour of Jones Hall. “The improvements fall into three
